EARLY CHILDHOOD EDUCATION

The early years comprise the fastest, most impressionable growth period in a person's life. What children learn in preschool shapes their attitudes about themselves and the world around them. During the early years, the child needs to feel confident, secure and loved.

Teachers gently guide the children and encourage creativity, spontaneity and testing out of ideas in a child-centered, play-based environment. Learning takes place every minute as the child explores his/her environment. The young child learns through: sensory perception, first hand active experiences and discovery play.

“Children's play is a primary vehicle for and an indicator of their mental growth. Play enables children to progress along the developmental sequence from the sensorimotor intelligence of infancy to the preoperational thought in preschool years to the concrete operational thinking exhibited by primary children. Therefore, child initiated teacher supported play in an essential component of developmentally appropriate practice.”

PARENT INVOLVEMENT

At St. Michael's Preschool, we feel you and your family are the first and foremost early educators in your child's development.

Therefore, we encourage our parents to become actively involved in our program. When a parent works first hand in the child's classroom, he/she will have a better understanding of early childhood education. Helping out in your child's class in only one way to become involved. At St. Michael's we have a multitude of different avenues to enable you to feel you are a part of your child's early education experience.

Parents As Teacher Helpers – Help out in your child's classroom during the class time. You will work with the children in the block area, read stories, or you may guide play in the dramatic play area. Adults only please, no siblings.

Room Parents – You may be asked to wash smocks, do errands, or cut out paper projects. This is for the parent who cannot come in, but would still like to help.

Parents of Preschoolers Organization – The POPS sponsors such events as family potlucks, socials, parent education, scholarship and preschool fundraisers. This is a wonderful way to meet other parents.
